

Future Farmer

Stratford Ecological Center provides college students with experiential education in sustainable agriculture and environmental education through internship programs during the spring, summer and fall seasons. Aspiring young farmers and teachers are provided with 8 to 12 week-long sessions of practical farming and teaching opportunities that can also qualify for independent study and/or internship credit hours through colleges or universities.

Agriculture Internship – Interns learn about organic production of fruits, vegetables and field crops as well as farm animal husbandry. They work side by side with Stratford’s farmer in managing and raising a small number of dairy and beef cows, goats, sheep, hogs and chickens for market. Interns will also participate in group discussions on topics addressing current trends in agriculture, our food and farming systems and the potential for promoting greater sustainability.
